CONVENTION OF MECHANICS.

The mechanics of Maine are to have a State Convention in different parts of the State they have formed themselves into associations for mutual, mental and scientific improvement and for moral and social culture. In this movement, to our certain knowledge, they have conferred great benefit upon themselves and the community, and they are so well aware of this that they have concluded to have a State convention by delegates from the various associations and from mechanics generally throughout the State, to give the result of their experience in making such associations and the benefits to be derived from them. The convention will be promotive of awakening general attention to the importance of that harmonious equality resulting from leveling up the depressed society by the power of mental improvement, the enlargement of social intercourse, the awakening of a generous sympathy for each others welfare, and causing a union of effort in devising and carrying into effect honorable measures for the accomplishment of these high objects.

The expense of attending the convention may appear as an obstacle to a general attendance, but it is hoped that every association will be represented and that in towns where no association already exists, the mechanics will meet together and delegate one or more of their number to attend, and, if need be, make up a little contribution to bear the whole or a part of the expense. Mechanics are not often rich, neither, in this State, can they be said to be poor, so that the burden upon them in the most remote town will be very light, while the advantage of having some of their neighbors present to report the proceedings and determination of the convention will be highly advantageous. It should be recollected also that the main scope and design of the convention will be in a measure defeated without a general attendance from all parts of the State.

We have long felt a deep interest in all measures tending to the improvement and elevation of the hard toiling laborers and in various ways have labored to aid them. It is on this account that we feel anxious this experiment of a State convention should terminate as successfully as those ardent friends who have proposed it, can desire, and that it may, we recommend to our mechanic brethren in every village to assemble together, talk over the matter and conclude to take a part in its deliberations.

War rumors continue to be circulated by the Boston Daily Mail. The mere fact that the general government are doing something to put the country in a decent state of defence and to improve the naval force is heralded as conclusive evidence of an immediate war. The low condition of our defences, that has been utterly neglected for several years past, will warrant an effort for improvement without any anticipation of immediate hostilities. We think honorable peace may best be preserved by suitable preparation for defence, and that this may be done without teasing and irritating the public mind with idle rumors of an immediate war. The desire to give notoriety to a newspaper and increase its sale may be thought a sufficient justification, but the writer can hardly think he is discharging his duty to the country.

The General Muster and review of the troops in this vicinity will take place at the farm of E. French, to-morrow. Most of our hands will be engaged, but they are brave soldiers with their shooting sticks. It has been made our business to distribute the half dollars to those on duty, and the sentinels will take notice and give us a free pass.

Animal Magnetism is stock run up at a great rate on Saturday evening at the City Hall, before a large audience. Dr. Collyer was repeatedly applauded during the performances. We confess there are some things about it hard to be understood, and cannot by us be explained, and yet the claims of Animal Magnetism seem too monstrous to be admitted.

At the recent distribution per capita of the Surplus Revenue at Portsmouth, N. H., a large number of persons were trusted for old debts, and the funds passed into the hands of creditors. Two hundred heads of families, some of them poor widows, were thus treated. In the distribution in this city, not a case of this kind occurred.

Soap locks are getting rather scarce among the fashionables in our large cities, and they now have quite a civilized appearance. The faces of many of them in this region look like a clam stock into a bundle of oat straw.

We notice with pleasure that some of our citizens who study the laws of health, walk out with their families at an early hour in the morning. This tends to strengthen the physical functions, and to give a healthful spring to the intellect.

A correspondent of the Boston Mercantile Journal thus speaks of our Worthy Governor:

As to Mr. Kent, he is a noble minded good man, and fills the chair of State in a manner very creditable to him. As a citizen, his political energies esteem him, so that his fall cannot be attributed to personal ill feeling. He has fallen on evil times, and it is to be regretted on his account. But, such as he is, he will not always be kept down, a time will come when it will be acknowledged by all parties.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

This steam packet arrived at Bangor on Saturday morning.

We learn by this arrival that the prospects of the harvest are decidedly more favorable a large quantity of grain had been imported into England which had caused a decline in price cotton was heavy and trade and manufactures were at a low ebb there was no ground for a alarm on account of the McLeod affair. The King of the French had commenced putting his army and navy on the peace establishment. The Whig Ministry had resigned and a new cabinet had been formed. Intelligence had been received from Canton to the 20th of April.

Steam carriages are now run on the roads in England with success. They have proceeded at the rate of 20 miles an hour, with sixteen passengers.

Meetings have been held in Great Britain at which the efforts of the Cause have been discussed and resolutions passed, fully justifying the attack on that vessel.

An English paper says that a system of gambling in corn is going on upon a large scale. A speculator engages to give so many shillings per quarter for the fall of wheat for the month of November, and so on, upon the same principle that put and call may be obtained at the Consol market. This desperate game had first resulted in serious disaster to the Bulls or parties going for the rise.

The Pasha of Egypt was recovering in peace, and by his gold, a great share of the influence and advantage which he had lost by provoking war.

The Porte had lowered its demand of tribute with Mehemet to 30,000,000 piastres. Syria is represented to be in a state of complete anarchy.

It is said, that the total abolition of slaves in Spain will ruin many of the great families.

Accounts from Madrid of the 23d inst. state that the Minister for Foreign Affairs withdrew on that day the bill for the proposition to cede to Great Britain the Islands of Annabon and Fernando Po.

The Russians are still prosecuting the war with the Circassians with vigor. But their enemies fight desperately, and with wonderful success.

The British Parliament. The Parliament assembled on the 19th ult. by commission, and Mr. Shaw Lefevre was elected Speaker. The Queen's speech was read by the Lord Chancellor, after which an address was proposed and a mended to the effect that Her Majesty's Government did not possess the confidence of the House or the country which after a long debate was carried by 165 against 106. A new Cabinet had been proposed to the Queen.

On the 3th ult., Lord Melbourne stated to the House of Lords that in consequence of the votes which had passed both branches of Parliament, he and his colleagues had come to the resolution to tender the resignation of the offices which they held, which resignation Her Majesty had graciously been pleased to accept. The House then adjourned to the 6th of September.

The McLeod Affair. The London Times of August 29, says:

All apprehensions of hostilities between the United States and this country, arising out of the detention of McLeod, by the authorities of New York, are happily set at rest. Lord Palmerston's replies, on Thursday night, in the House of Commons, to a string of questions proposed by Mr. Roebuck conveyed renewed assurances that Mr. McLeod's safety, and not distant release, had been pledged to the British Government by the American authorities.

The attack on the Caroline was a national act and raised a question between nations which an individual could be brought before the ordinary tribunals of the country under such circumstances. The noble lord then referred to the authorities regarding international rights and privileges. The Hon. member thought it was better to leave the question to the good sense and justice of the United States, and it would now be better not to enter into any speculations as to what the future conduct of America might be.

The turn of affairs and twistings of diplomacy are as unexpected as they are ingenious. In the course of this speech Lord Palmerston gave a very impartial, succinct, and clear history of the position of the States to the U. S. general government.

It is easy to perceive how the application of this just and proper view, will relieve all future difficulty in relation to this matter. Whatever the State of New York may do in the premises, the British Ministry cannot, on the ground that Lord Palmerston has taken and was well received by the members on both sides, recognize the State of New York at all, without doing what would amount to a denial on the part of Great Britain of fundamental principles of the constitution of the United States. To the U. S. Courts the matter will be ultimately carried if necessary, and their action is all that the English Ministry can recognize. And, to carry the matter into the Federal Courts in a legal manner, is all that can be expected of the U. S. authorities. For time, they have pledged themselves with this the English Nation is more than satisfied, our national honor is vindicated by dignified conduct on the part of the government, the State rights of New York are respected and the cloud we repeat, is blown over.

In answer to a suggestion of Mr. Roebuck that her Majesty's government ought, on the subject of this affair, to have sent out a special envoy to the authorities in the State of New York, he (Lord Palmerston) stated his opinion that such a proceeding would have amounted to a nullification or denial on the part of Great Britain of the fundamental principles of the constitution of the United States and that they would have treated it as an affront on the Federal Government (Hear, hear). There fore it was not from any neglect on the part of Her Majesty's Government that this course had not been taken, on the contrary, it had been avoided out of the respect they were bound to pay to the constitution of the United States.

It is however evident by the tone of the English papers, that a good deal of feeling exists among the people on this subject and some politicians think that a war with this or some other country is advisable, for the purpose of rescuing many thousands of the poorer classes from distress and starvation.

The National Intelligencer contains an address of the Whig members of Congress to the People of the United States. We shall publish it at the earliest possible day.

It will be seen by the notice in another column that a new and thrilling scene has been added to the Diorama of the Battle of Bunker Hill.

THE LADIES' FAIR.

(From the Saturday Courier.)

BY T. S. ARTHUR, ESQ.

Well, what else will you have? Miss Sarah went on. I've got some lovely things on my table. Ah, this is the very article that you want Emma.

Miss Sarah here picked up a silver mounted card case, beautifully enamelled, and handed it to Emma.

That will just be the change, she said. And now won't you have something else? she continued, looking into the face, while Emma took possession of the card case in the most natural way imaginable.

Nothing more to night, I believe, replied Emma in a tone intended to be gay and unconcerned.

The thought of fifteen dollars absolutely thrown away and the flitting memory of his unpaid tailor's bill made the sound of his voice spite of every effort to prevent it, anything but cheerful.

I don't see any thing of Mr. Morton here. Where is he? remarked the young lady who had compelled Irvin to purchase the cut glass oblique bottles for her.

I could not persuade him to come, Irvin replied. I'm afraid of his money, I presume, ha, ha.

Yes, I suppose so.

Well, I have no charity for such mean kind of people, the young lady went on to say. I don't suppose he ever gave away any thing in his life.

Sister expected him to come for her, Emma said, and she will be very much disappointed.

I don't see your acquaintance with Mr. Sarah. And she will too, said Emma warmly.

Irvin interposed a word for his friend, but it was at once voted by acclamation, that Edward Morton was a young man of a narrow mind and mean spirit.

I only wish I had his resolution and good sense, and were once clear of this gird of gold pockets, sighed Irvin, in a tone of bitterness of spirit.

But it was not yet to be. He had a five dollar note left, and every far and a woman seemed to know it. Turn which way he would with Emma on his arm he was met with smiling invitations to buy or juggle humorously for not having a better feeling. He were more than a weak, vain man, to stand all these, especially as his fair companion never once came to his aid with a prompt. No, we have done our part to night.

Take a chance in this raffle, said a sales woman, catching hold of his arm and arresting his course almost by main strength.

A raffle, oh, a raffle, exclaimed Emma turning quickly towards a beautiful rocking chair, a pair of ottomans, and a piano stool, all richly covered with worsted needle work, and of course her attendant turned with her.

A chance in the rocking chair for your fair friend, and two for you in the ottomans and piano stool, said the saleswoman, holding up a paper containing the names of the chance holders.

That is the rule to night for every gentleman and lady.

What are the chances? asked Irvin.

Oddly two dollars in the rocking chair, and a dollar and a half each in the piano stools and ottomans. Just five dollars. Shall I put down your names?

Emma Grant, replied Irvin's friend, not waiting for her companion's reply.

And your name? said the woman, looking him in the face.

James Irvin, replied the young man mechanically.

Yes very well. The raffle will take place on Friday evening.

Irvin had now a talismanic form of words, whenever asked to buy.

I have laid out all my money, I caused every opportunity to cease instantly. I thought, relieved at this, he could not but perceive and feel the changed manners of those who were ready to court his attention. Having got all of his money, smiles and winning words would have been lost on him and but few therefore were thrown away on so unpromising an object.

Emma, too, seeing that she had little more to hope for, soon proposed to return home, and glad to escape from a place that had lost to him all attractions, Irvin bade it good night and turned away.

After Irvin had left Morton, in the early part of the evening, the latter went to his trunk, and taking from thence some money, put on his hat and walked out. The quickness of his step indicated that he was not bent on a stroll, simply for relaxation after the business of the day.

Twenty minutes walk brought him to the door of a small house in the suburbs, which he entered without knocking.

Good evening, Ellen, he said to a pale and delicate looking woman, who sat sewing at a small table.

Good evening, brother Edward, responded the woman rising, with a smile of pleasure on her face.

How do you feel to night, Ellen, asked her brother, kindly.

Well, I don't know, Edward, that I feel any better, but I don't think I am any worse, she said, with an effort to smile cheerfully.

I am afraid, sister, you sit too long at your needle.

Perhaps I do. But then, Edward, you know that I cannot be idle.

Yes, I know that, Ellen, you have need of the tool of many more hours than you can give. But you must spare yourself a little more, it is possible.

There was a sadness in the young man's tone that touched the heart of his sister. He had ever been to her a kind brother and she loved him with a pure, unselfish, sisterly affection. It moved her feelings with unusual tenderness.

Emma, too, seemed to be borne down by a consciousness of her hard lot with all the power of relieving it. A young widow, poor, in ill health, and with two small children, her condition it may readily be imagined, was one of many privations and many hard trials. Her brother was receiving a salary of but four hundred dollars, as clerk and salesman in a retail dry goods store. Out of this he paid one hundred and fifty dollars for his boarding and his clothes.

washing, and a few other necessities, took an equal sum. The balance of one hundred dollars he regularly handed over to his sister, in small sums as he received it from his employer. Her needle supplied her with all else she required.

The silence that followed the young man's last remark was interrupted by his saying, as he handed her some money.

gratitude that no spoken language could have conveyed.

I hope I shall be able to do better for you one of these days, he replied. I must get a higher salary before long, and then I will rent a house so near the store that I can live with you, and make you a great deal more comfortable than you are now.

I will try and be contented as things are, and so must you, Edward. How much worse off I might be, than I am. Suppose I had no brother to care for me? And the tears came into the eyes of the sister as she felt a momentary pang at the idea, called up so vividly.

Yes, sister, it is better, of course to make the best of our condition be it as it may, replied Edward, with a deep inspiration. Have you as much work as you can do? he added, in a changed tone.

No not such a great deal. Mrs. Mason has a good deal of sewing for me but she has been so taken up with this fair for the last two or three weeks, that she could not find the time to get it ready. And Mrs. Walker is in the same way. I have lost too, three whole days from working the body of a child's cap for Mrs. Mason to present to the fair.

Not for nothing, I hope, said the brother, in a tone of surprise.

Yes for nothing. Mrs. Mason throws a good deal in my way and when she asked me to do it I could not refuse.

Well, indeed, Ellen that is hard. It is nothing less nor more, than Mrs. Mason taking the bread out of our children's mouths.

It has come pretty near to that, the sister said with a sigh. I was put back so much with the slip that I could not get home any work, until after we had eaten every morsel of food in the house. I have been hard put to it, this week, Edward.

I need, indeed, that is too bad. This fair, I believe, is to pay for cushioning all the pews in the church, and putting new hangings about the pulpit. And to do this, the widow and the orphan must be robbed of their mite, and that too, in the name of charity.

It does seem a little too hard. Ellen remarked. But then people don't think they are carried away by show and excitement.

But they ought to think, especially when they profess to be acting from good-fish and charitable motives. As far as I can see into them these things are in general conducted upon wrong principles—and I am almost prepared to say that they have their foundation also in wrong principles.

The first idea in reference to a fair is the want of money for a specific purpose. The second idea is that an unwillingness exists on the part of the public to give the required sum. The next is that this unwilling public may and shall be wheedled out of five hundred or two or three hundred dollars in the name of charity.

And then the whole machinery of a fair is set in motion while the large sum that the end sacrifices the means, seems to take full possession of all engaged in putting it into operation. Every artifice and every form of oppression are resorted to in inducing visitors to purchase wretched trifles, at enormous prices.

Money is taken from individuals who properly declare that they are unable to give, but who look the firmness to refuse to buy when pressed and persuaded on all sides. All this is wrong in principle. True charity incites justice to every one.

And what is worse than all added Ellen, these things are done in the name of religion.

Yes, sister that is truly its worst feature. Ministers of the gospel, too are often seen encouraging and giving them their countenance, forgetting that any departure from justice is a departure from religious principle. I never at tended but one fair, and then I was weak enough to throw away five dollars because I was pestered with ironical, for being miserly. I thus have dollars sister, you stand much in need of and I had intended them for you. But I suffered the wrong woman and the orphan's slender portion to be taken from me, and given towards buying a splendid organ for a splendid church. How wrong. How wrong!

I could at think of that any more, Edward, said his sister, kindly, it always seems to worry me.

Yes it does worry me, Ellen, but, then how can I help thinking about it? In fact, such thoughts will come into my mind, so what I will to keep them away. Still I know that it is for me to do right, in the present, without being disturbed by the errors and wrong doings of others. And this I am ever trying to do, but have not yet learned the happy art.

ORDER OF EXERCISES.

THE PENOBSCOT AGRICULTURAL FAIR AND EXHIBITION.

AT BANGOR.

Sept 29th and 30th 1841.

There will be a meeting of the Society, for business, at the City Hall at 9 o'clock in the morning of the first day. The several committees are especially requested to be present, so as to fill vacancies and do whatever else may be necessary preparatory to their several examinations which will commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

At ten o'clock the several committees will proceed to make their examinations of the various articles submitted for exhibition in their several departments. The owners of all articles exhibited are expected to be present and to give information to the committees, as they may desire, in addition to the written statements required by the Trustees.

All articles for exhibition should be left in the hands of the Receiver at the Gun House, who will see that they are carefully registered and directions given for their exhibition at the Fair.

The Society will hold a public meeting at the Court House in the evening at seven o'clock for discussion.

On the morning of the second day at eight o'clock the several committees will make their reports at the place of exhibition, immediately after which such articles as the owners desire to sell, will be offered at auction.

At ten o'clock A. M. a procession of the society and citizens will be formed in front of the Court House and proceed to the Union street Church under the direction of Capt. William H. Mills Chief Marshal.

BY REQUEST, DR. COLLYER,

WILL CONTINUE HIS INVESTIGATION OF Animal Magnetism!

AT THE CITY HALL.

FOR A FEW EVENINGS LONGER.

ON each evening a subject will be brought before the public, and the power of the human mind will be tested in the most extraordinary manner.

These investigations cannot fail to reveal the true nature of the mind and its powers, and to show the extent of its influence over the material world.

The first subject will be the power of the mind to control the elements of nature, and to produce fire, water, and air, at will.

The second subject will be the power of the mind to control the human body, and to produce various diseases, and to cure them at will.

The third subject will be the power of the mind to control the spirits of the dead, and to communicate with them.

The fourth subject will be the power of the mind to control the fate of the human race, and to produce peace and happiness on earth.

The fifth subject will be the power of the mind to control the destiny of the human soul, and to secure it a happy and eternal home in heaven.

The sixth subject will be the power of the mind to control the course of the human life, and to make it a life of virtue and happiness.

The seventh subject will be the power of the mind to control the future of the human race, and to make it a race of free and happy people.

The eighth subject will be the power of the mind to control the destiny of the human world, and to make it a world of peace and happiness.

The ninth subject will be the power of the mind to control the fate of the human race, and to make it a race of free and happy people.

The tenth subject will be the power of the mind to control the destiny of the human world, and to make it a world of peace and happiness.

The eleventh subject will be the power of the mind to control the fate of the human race, and to make it a race of free and happy people.
